TEACHING CHILDREN TO THINK .- An address to parents, from the Committee on Edu cation of the Yearly Meeting of Friends, contains this hint :

"As education neither begins nor ends with school, home it fluence has a most important part in it. Much depends on the readiness and patience with which a child's first questions in the fields of knowledge or of thought are answered. An encouraging answer will stimulate thought and investigation; and an unsympa thizing and indifferent answer will leave the child to choose inferior ways of finding pleasure, and so begin to form the bias of its life. True Obristian tenderness and self denial cannot be better exercised often than in trying to understand the mental difficulties of children who are not naturally quick of apprehension. It is in the very early years of life, generally, that the habit is formed of loving to think, or of dislik. ing to think; and no doubt the scale has often turned in favor of distiking, on account of some difficulty which the child might have been helped to master by a sympath zing parent, but failing in its efforts, it becomes discouraged, grows tired of repeated endeavors without the pleasure of success, takes up the depressing be liof that it cannot think anything out, and goes on through life under this disability; and thus a loss of intellectual pleasure, and a turning to loss profitable sources follows, as well as a failure to fill up the intended measure of useful ELEPHANTS TAKING A BATH. - While the Great London Circus was in Baltimore, Md. the trainer of the ten elephants took them out to Jones' Falls for a bath. Slowly and with stately strides the seven Asiatics and the three little Africans filed down the hill to the banks of the classic stream, but no sooner did they touch the water than the "natur" of the beasts" changed entirely at least that of the control of the classics. changed entirely, at least that of the emigrants from Asi. In they plunged with all the zest of sehoolboys; and such a scene of ponderous gamboling was surely never seen in Jones' Falls. The water was about six feet deep, but they went under and rolled over, and came up and spouted great streams through their trunks into the air, and with malice aforethought, overturned each other, and even actually 'ducked' one another, one placing his fore feet upon the other's head and forcing it under the water again and again The Africans did not take so kindly to the bath and from their small size were the victims of more than one practical joke at the hands-or feet -of their bigger cousins.
